LADIES' SWIMMING SCHOOL IN PARIS Quarnier's Swimming School for Ladies opens in the mouth of May, and it is difficult to imagine a more novel or prettier scene than it presents on a warm afternoon. Neither at concert, race, nor ball, in Paris, have I beheld so many beautiful faces as at this school one reason, perhaps, being that many girls from ten to fifteen are visitors to the bath, who are excluded by their age, from sharing in public amusements.

The young ladies of the aristocratic Fau bourg, St. Germain, the daughters of the wealthy "financiers," the families attached to the Emperor, all meet here with the same intention-namely, to swim; and all who are able, gambol, race and laugh in the water, forgetful of party and social distinctions. The costume is generally of some dark material, gaily trimmed with red or blue worsted binding, which does not lose its color. The upper part of the dress resembles a boy's blouse; the lower, a pair of trousers. It is all in one, and a tunic is sewn to the waist and falls to the knee. Some of the girls go in without any kind of head dress beyond their own fine hair, neatly plaited; others wear nets of gay colors, or a slight netted scarlet or blue scarf gracefully arranged.

A basin of about 150 or 160 feet long, and about 25 or 30 feet broad, surrounded by a broad platform, enclosed by the dressingrooms and screened alike from the sun and from public observation by an awning stretched over all. The machine is so arranged that the powerful current of the Seine rushes through it; it is, in fact, a large cage sunk to the required depth.

That part of the basin, which is from four to five feet deep, is crossed by a bridge; and the smaller portion thus indicated is used by those who wish to bathe only, or who are not sufficiently good swimmers to exercise, as yet, in the larger one. But the large basin is the centre of attraction. At the end where the water is deepest, flights of steps lead down for those who like to swim smoothly and quietly off; but far the greater number prefer leaping in either from the platform, or from the little fanciful construction, half arch, half temple, raised at the end of it, and which gives a descent any height you please -between ten and thirty-feet-to the surface

Fearless, gay, and graceful, they plunge beneath the flood to reappear almost instantly, gliding down the stream without any apparent effort; floating, swimming on the back, &c., vary the amusements, which more than a hundred ladies may sometimes be seen sharing together, their evolutions being watched and stimulated by as many lookers on—their mothers and female friends who are seated around. Little did I think, when I inscribed myself on M. Quarnier's list, that I should be hung on a hook at the end of a directions to imitate a frog to the best of my hars, and upwards, can be sent to us at OUR RISK line, and then thrown into the water with ability; it was even so.

O dear, how helpless you feel!—how you wish you had never thought of learning to swim! But you are ashamed to say so; you know you cannot be drowned; the man adjusts his line so nicely to the level of the water, you feel quite sure of that. So he "One, two, three, and you perform Froggy awkwardly enough, putting out your hands when you ought to keep them in, stretching your arms forward when they ought to be close to your body, kicking in anything but measured cadence, and getting drawing, in the following papers:—Augusta (Geo.)

a good mouthful, notwithstanding you, silly Constitutionalist, Mobile Register, Nashville Gaa good mouthful, notwithstanding you, silly creature, stiffen your neck, and try to keep your head up by that means. Thus ends the first lesson.

After two or off from the steps at the end, where the water is deepest, the man on the platform preter is deepest, the man on the platform pre-ceeding you with a pole, as you attempt to Refined Camphor, Tamarinds, Soap Powder, Gargmake your way down the large basin. This large basin is constantly watched, either by Quarnier himself or by the swimming master. These are the only individuals of the male sex over present. Madame Quarnier is, as may be expected, a perfect swimmer, and takes an active interest in all the pro-

A DRUNKEN RACE HORSE.

The London Era says, that prior to the late race for the Durham Handicap, Little Agnes, the winner, had half a gallon of strong beer given her, and the result of the race led John Osborne to remark, that he wished he had given her a similar dose before the Northamptonshire Stakes. Little Agnes penalized for this victory, started for the Borough Handicap, at Catterick Bridge, on the following Wednesday, on the "tectotal principle," and did not win. Before Breeze started for the North Durham Handicap, the following week, her Hunt's Liniment; Brown's Essence Jamaica Ginparty thinking probably to work greater wonders with whiskey than John Osborne had done with strong beer, gave her a pint of that liquor. She however, was beaten at the last | Worm Confections, &c .- just received and for sale turn, and without being run against, tumbled by on her head, after passing the spot. This practice of exciting racers for difficult exploits, is an abuse of a noble animal, which is not compensated for by any natural exhibition of

UNDERGROUND LAKES IN MICHIGAN .- Scattered throughout the peninsular State are large numbers of beautiful, clear lakes, from a tiny pond to those of miles in circumference. Sometimes those lakes are found under a crust of earth from six to ten feet in thickness, the surface bearing the appearance of marsh or meadow. In building the Central road, in crossing with an embankment for the track, a place of this kind, near Niles, considerable difficulty was found in making the road bed substantial. Recently in constructing a wagon road near Battle Creek, another one was found. The weight of the material used for the track crushed through the crust which covered the lake and entirely disappeared, so that not a vestige of it can be seen. The lake is about thirty
